The Internet Archive, working with Alexa Internet, has created the Wayback Machine. The Wayback Machine makes it possible to surf pages stored in the Internet Archive's web archive. The Wayback Machine was unveiled on October 24th at the Library of Congress and the University of California - Berkeley's Bancroft Library. Visit the Wayback Machine by entering an URL above or clicking on specific collections below.

- Special Wayback Collections -

The United States Elections of 2000 were perhaps the most controversial elections in our nation's history. This collection was commissioned by the Library of Congress to archive digital materials covering the Election of 2000. Additional assistance has been provided by Alexa Internet and Compaq. It contains 800 gigabytes of data gathered from 8/1/2000 to 1/21/2001. For more information see the Press Release or FAQs.

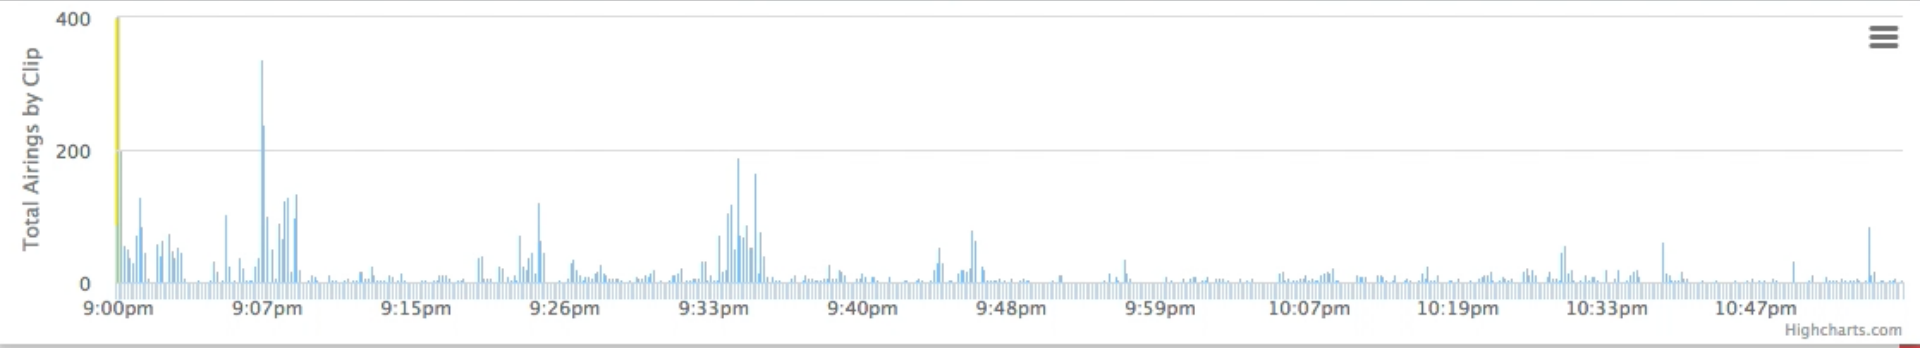
Republican Debate #1



(BAIER) Gentlemen, we know how much you love hand-raising questions. So we promise, this is the only one tonight: the only one. Is there anyone on stage, and can I see hands, who is unwilling tonight to pledge your support to the eventual nominee of the Republican party and pledge to not run an independent campaign against that person.

(BAIER) Again, were looking for you to raise your hand now -- raise your hand now if you wont make that pledge tonight. Mr. Trump.

(BAIER) Mr. Trump to be clear, youre standing on a Republican primary debate stage.

(TRUMP) I fully understand.

(BAIER) The place where the RNC will give the nominee the nod.

(TRUMP) I fully understand.

(BAIER) And that experts say an independent run would almost certainly hand the race over to Democrats and likely another Clinton. You cant say tonight that you can make that pledge?

(TRUMP) I cannot say. I have to respect the person that, if its not me, the person that wins, if

Ten engaging ways educators can use the Political TV Ad Archive

APRIL 7, 2016

From journalism to history to media literacy education, there are many ways that the Political TV Ad Archive can be used to engage students in the classroom. Yesterday we posted how MIT Media Lab students used Political TV Ad Archive data to analyze trends and create visualizations. But there are many, many more possibilities—the options below are just a start. These ideas [...]

Welcome to the Macromedia CD-ROM Archives

Macromedia has generously donated their collection of CD-ROM's to the Archive's CD-ROM & Software Library.

Currently, only 4 of these CDs are available for download. The Collection consists of over 10,000 CD-ROM titles (from the Made-With-Macromedia Program) and we are in the process of making this into an accessible resource for people to use and enjoy.

We welcome all feedback!

THE BIRD BOOK

211. Clapper Rail. Rallus crepitans crepitans.

Range.—Salt marshes of the Atlantic coast from southern New England southward.

A grayish colored Rail, about the size of, and with the markings similar to those of the King Rail. It is so exclusively a salt water species as the King Rail is a fresh water one. With the possible exception of the Carolina or Sora Rail, this is the most abundant of all the Rails, hundreds nesting in a single marsh on the South Atlantic coast. Their nests are built of rushes and weeds, and are placed on the ground either in the tall grass bordering the marshes or attached to the rushes in the midst of the marsh. The nesting season commences during April and continues through May. They lay from six to fourteen eggs, of a buff color spotted irregularly with brown and gray. Size 1.70 x 1.20.

Buff.

King Rail. Clapper Rail.

211a. Louisiana Clapper Rail. Rallus crepitans saturatus.

The habitation of this subspecies is limited to the coast of Louisiana. It is very similar to the proceeding but is said to be brighter in plumage.

211b. Florida Clapper Rail. Rallus crepitans scotti.

Range.—Western coast of Florida.

This bird is also similar to crepitans but is much darker and brighter.

211c. Wayne's Clapper Rail. Rallus crepitans waynei.

Range.—South Atlantic coast from North Carolina to Florida.

This subspecies is a little darker than crepitans, being about midway between that species and Rallus scotti. The nests and eggs of any of these subspecies cannot be distinguished from those of the common Clapper Rail.

211.2. Caribbean Clapper Rail. Rallus longirostris caribaeus.

Range.—West Indies and east coast of Mexico, north to southern Texas.

This species is similar to the Clapper, but has a shorter and relatively stouter bill.

212. Virginia Rail. Rallus virginianus.

Range.—Temperate North America, breeding from the Middle States and California, northward to British Columbia and Labrador, and wintering along the Gulf coast; most abundant in the east.

A small Rail, 9 inches long, very similar in markings and coloration to the King Rail. It is found chiefly in fresh water swamps, where it builds its nests in tufts of rushes. The eggs number from six to fourteen, and are creamy white, or white, speckled with reddish brown. Size 1.25 x .90. Data.—Fighting Island, Detroit River, Michigan, May 30, 1904. Nest made of marsh grass, in rushes, 6 inches above the water. Collector, E. Leroy King.

Creamy white.

Sora Virginia Rail.

[213.] Spotted Crake. Porzana porzana.

This common European species is casually found in Greenland. It breeds in large numbers throughout temperate Europe, nesting as do the American Rails.

214. Sora. Porzana carolina.

Range.—Temperate North America, breeding from the southern parts of the British possessions, south to the Gulf coast.

This abundant species of Rail may be readily known by its small size, about eight inches long, and the black face and throat of the adult. These are the "Rail-birds" or "Ortolans" which are annually slaughtered by thousands, for sport and marketing, during their fall migration. It is only because of the large families that they rear, that they are able to withstand this yearly decimination of their ranks. They nest either in salt of fresh water marshes, making a rude structure of grass, weeds and strips of rushes, on the ground, generally concealed in a tuft of grass in a tangled swamp or marsh. During May, they lay from six to sixteen eggs of a bright, buffy gray color, spotted with reddish brown and lavender. Size 1.25 x .90.

Bright buff.
